

As a media critic and journalist, I strongly protest the cross-ownership rules being relaxed at all. It is the FCC's job, amongst other things, to see that the public airwaves, which belong, may I remind you, to the public, are not dominated, overly influenced or filtered by corporate ownership. An argument can be made that there is already undue corporate control of the media in this country. Your relaxation of the rules of cross-ownership is an abrogation of your responsibility as a federal agency. I would like a response, prior to my writing a column for my outlet, which will reach 210,00 readers locally in Los Angeles plus be posted on the Internet. Thank you for your immediate attention.
